

Save Equalia

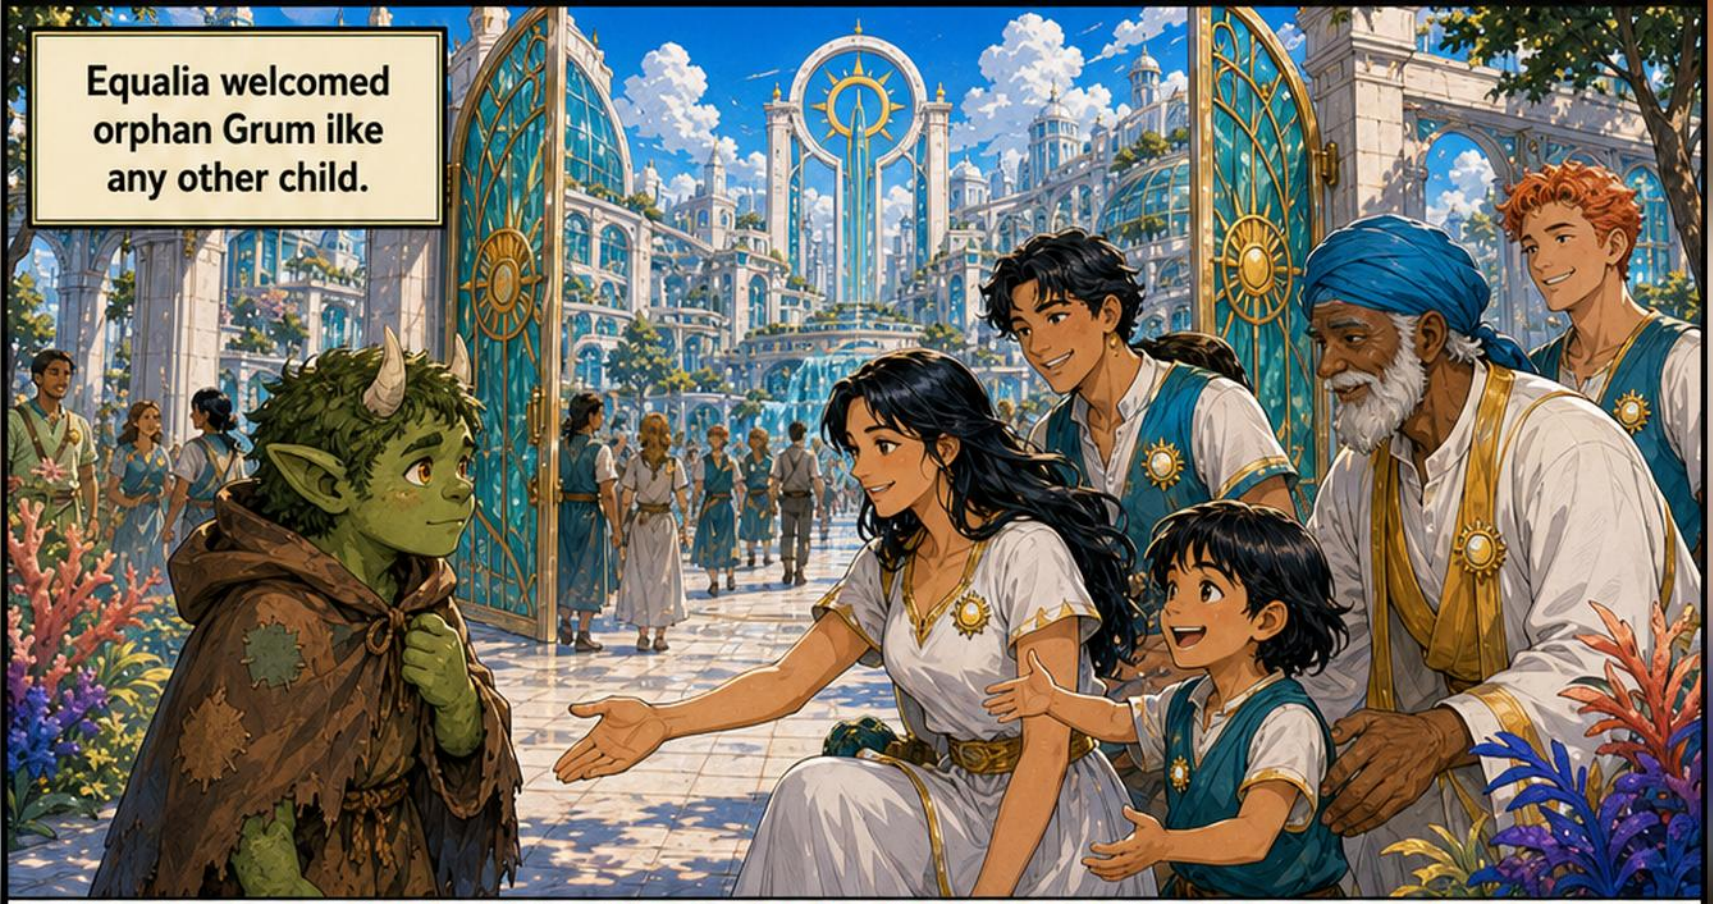

Equalia treated every person with the same respect.

No one received special treatment, and no one was left outside.

Equalia welcomed orphan Grum like any other child.

He grew up loved and equal, until a dark visitor arrived.

Lord Veyr demanded
worship because he was
immortal and powerful.

Equalia refused
because equal respect
does not kneel.

Veyr brainwashed
every human in the city.

The spell only
worked on humans.

Grum stayed free.

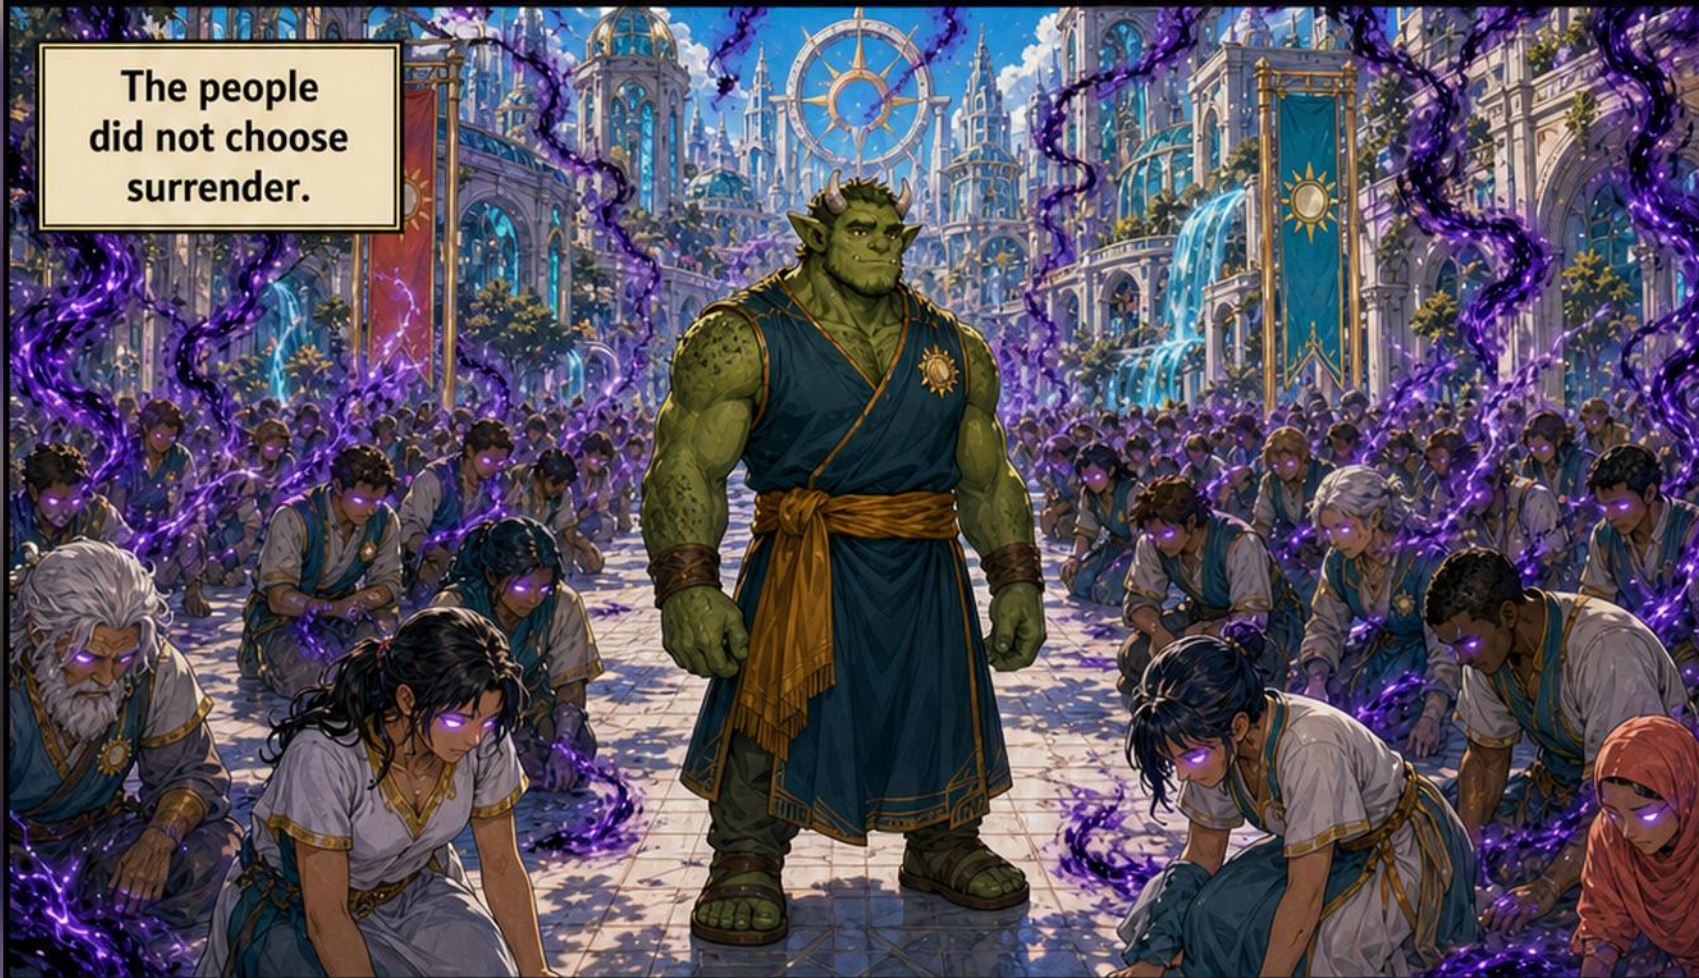

Equalia's systems
were good, but humans
carried them.

When human minds
were captured, every
ordinary answer failed.

The people
did not choose
surrender.

Only Grum
was still free
to act.

Veyr turned equal neighbors into
obedient subjects.

The people who raised Grum could not
even ask for help.

Grum saw his family
and neighbors trapped
inside their own bodies.

If he did nothing,
Equalia would become
a city in chains.

Grum was the one
mind Veyr had not captured.

He demanded that Veyr
end the spell and leave Equalia free.

Grum was stronger than Veyr.

Veyr was clever.

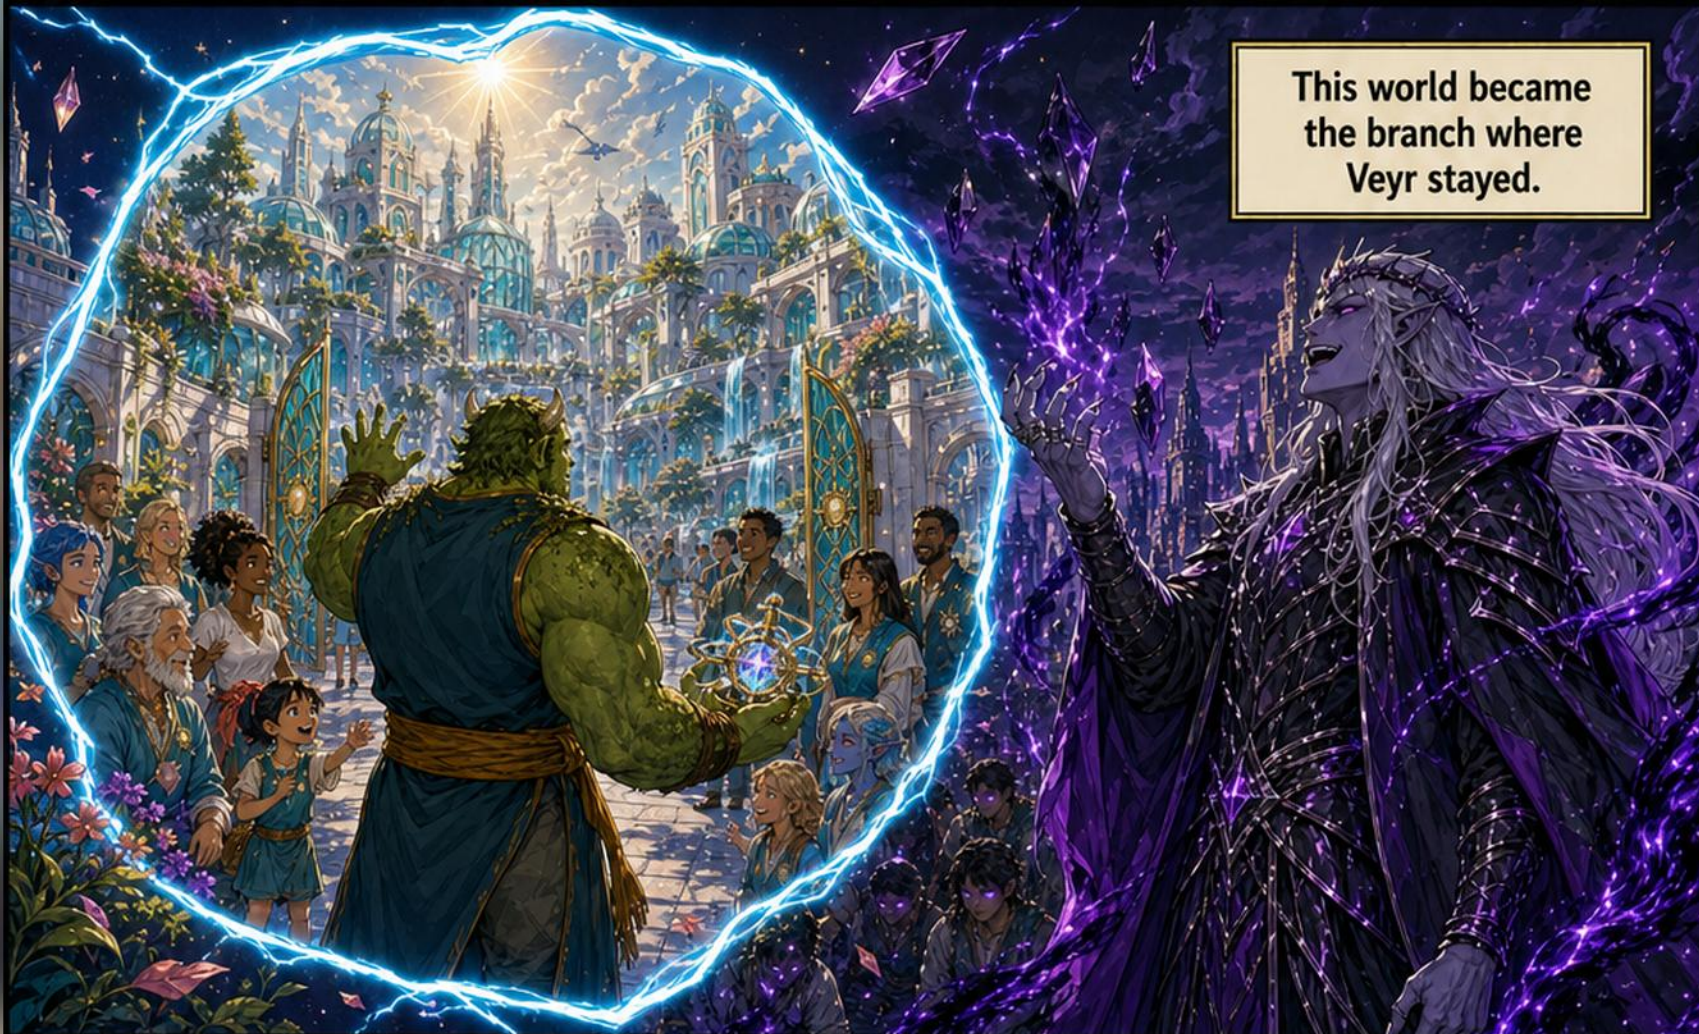

He raised the Universe Splitter.

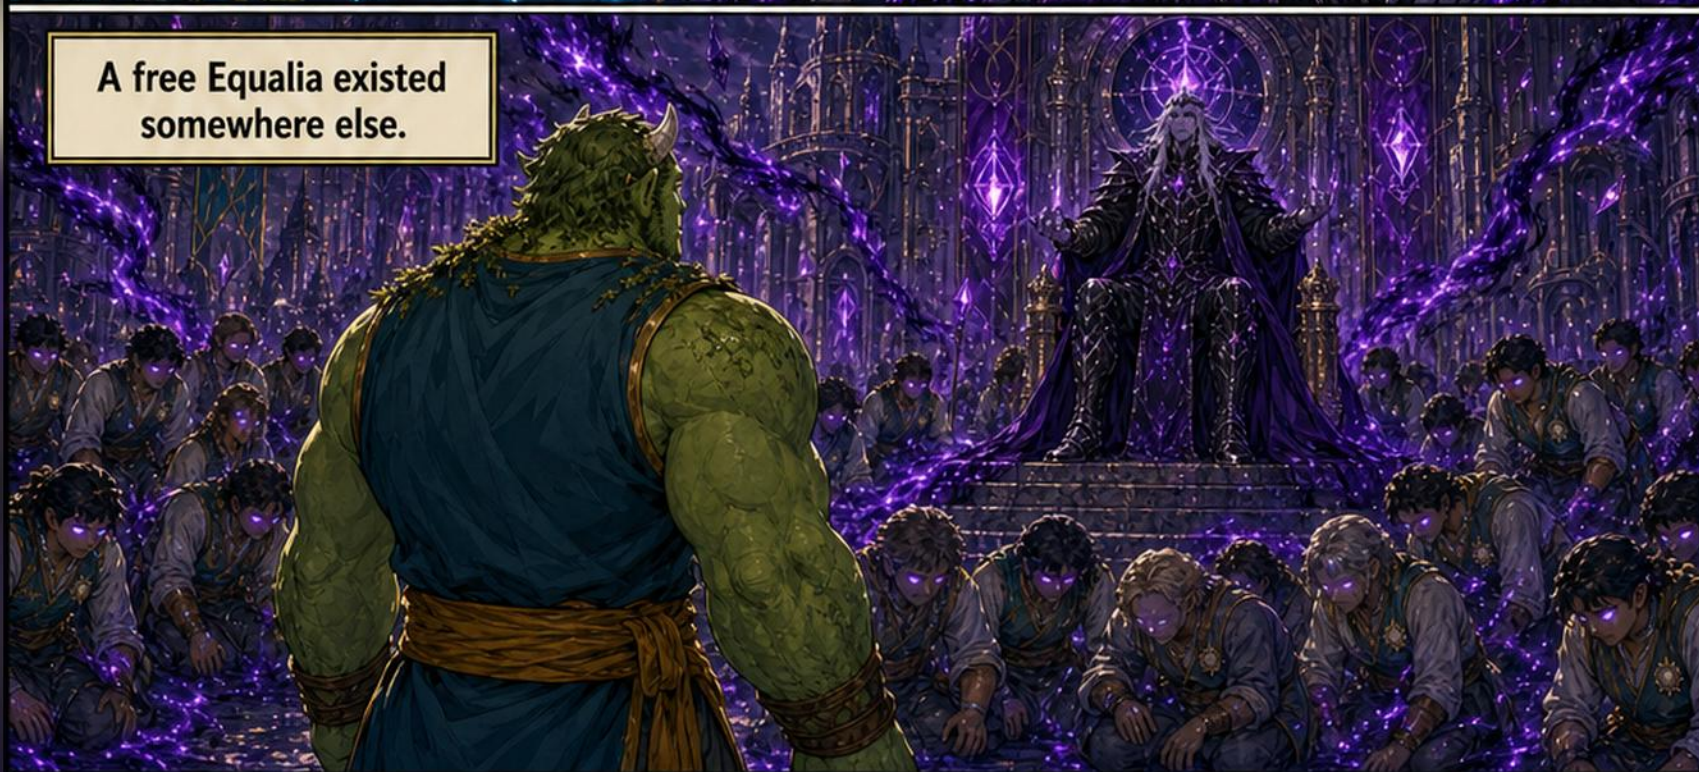

The device
divided reality
by choices.

One world held surrender,
and one world held refusal.

This world became
the branch where Veyr stayed.

A free Equalia existed
somewhere else.

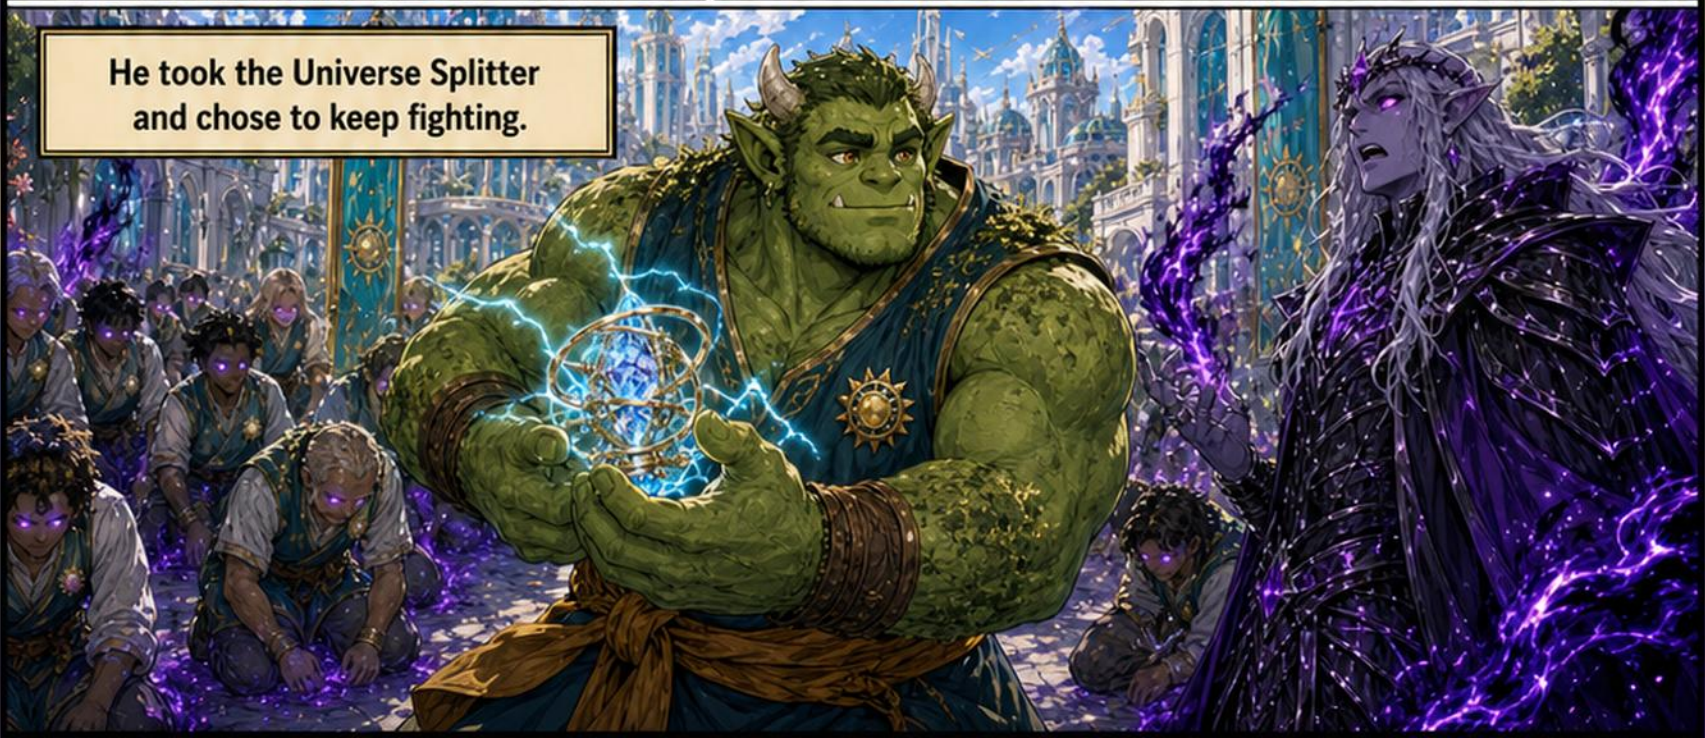

Grum still had to save
the people in front of him.

Grum refused to abandon his own world.

He took the Universe Splitter
and chose to keep fighting.

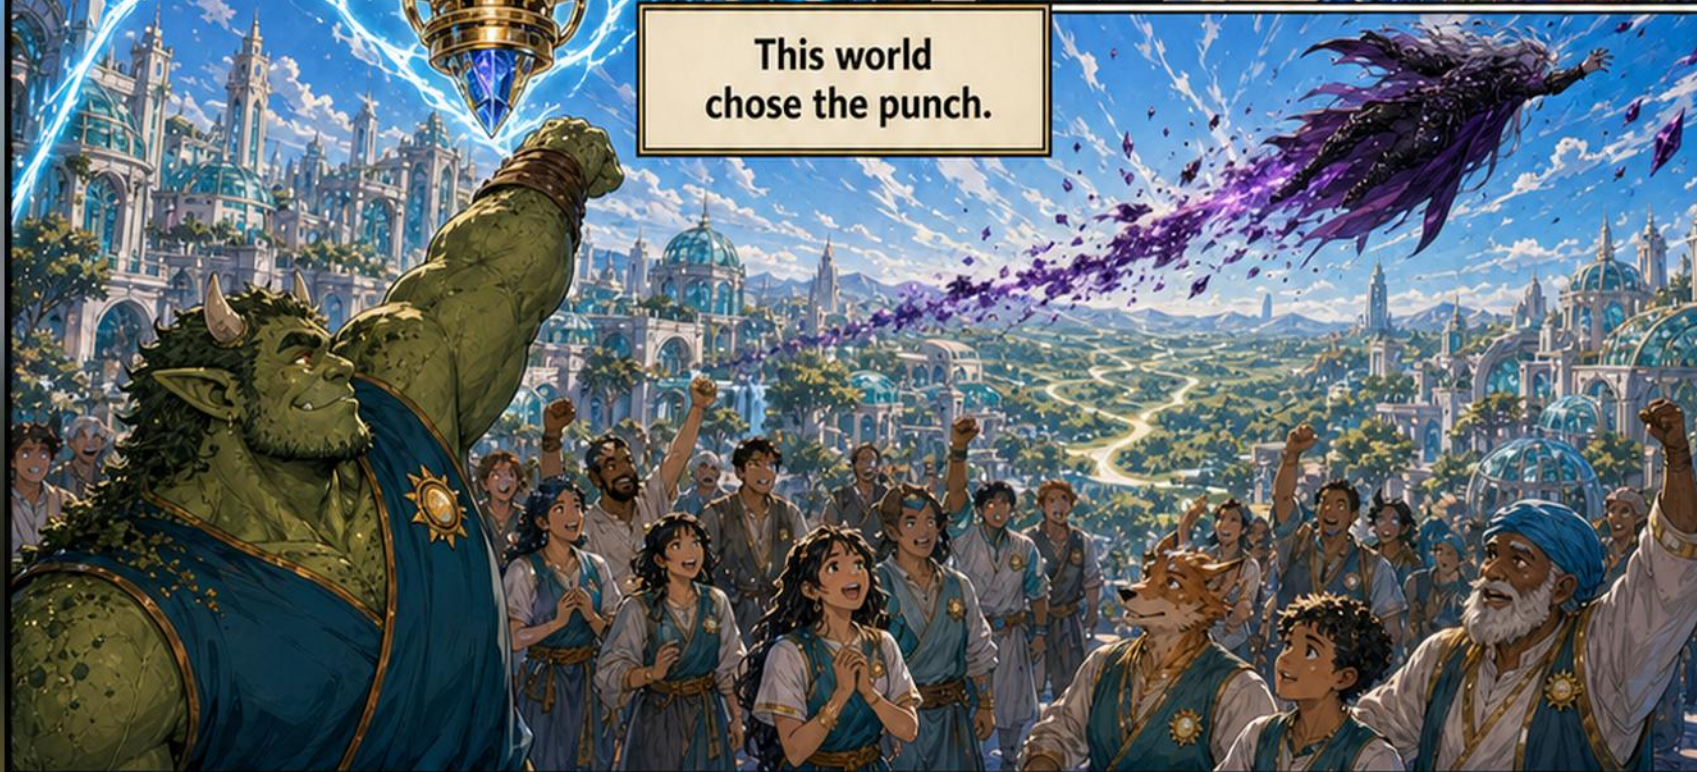

One branch
held shame and exile.

One branch
held a saving blow.

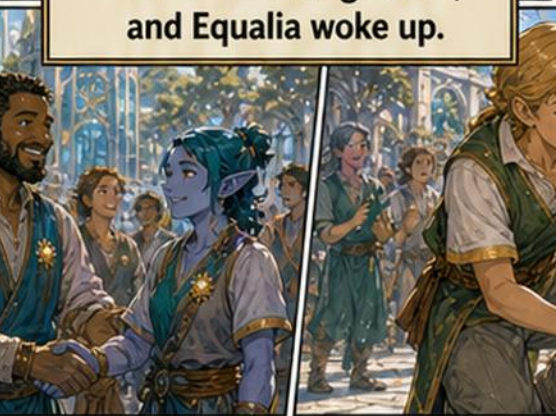

This world
chose the punch.

Veyr flew too far away to hold the spell.

The brainwashing broke, and Equalia woke up.

The people
returned to themselves.

They asked about
the branch where
Grum left in shame.

Grum believed
the other Grum went
to find a hero guild.

The lesson was simple:
there is always another way to try.

Equalia wanted
to thank him without
betraying equality.

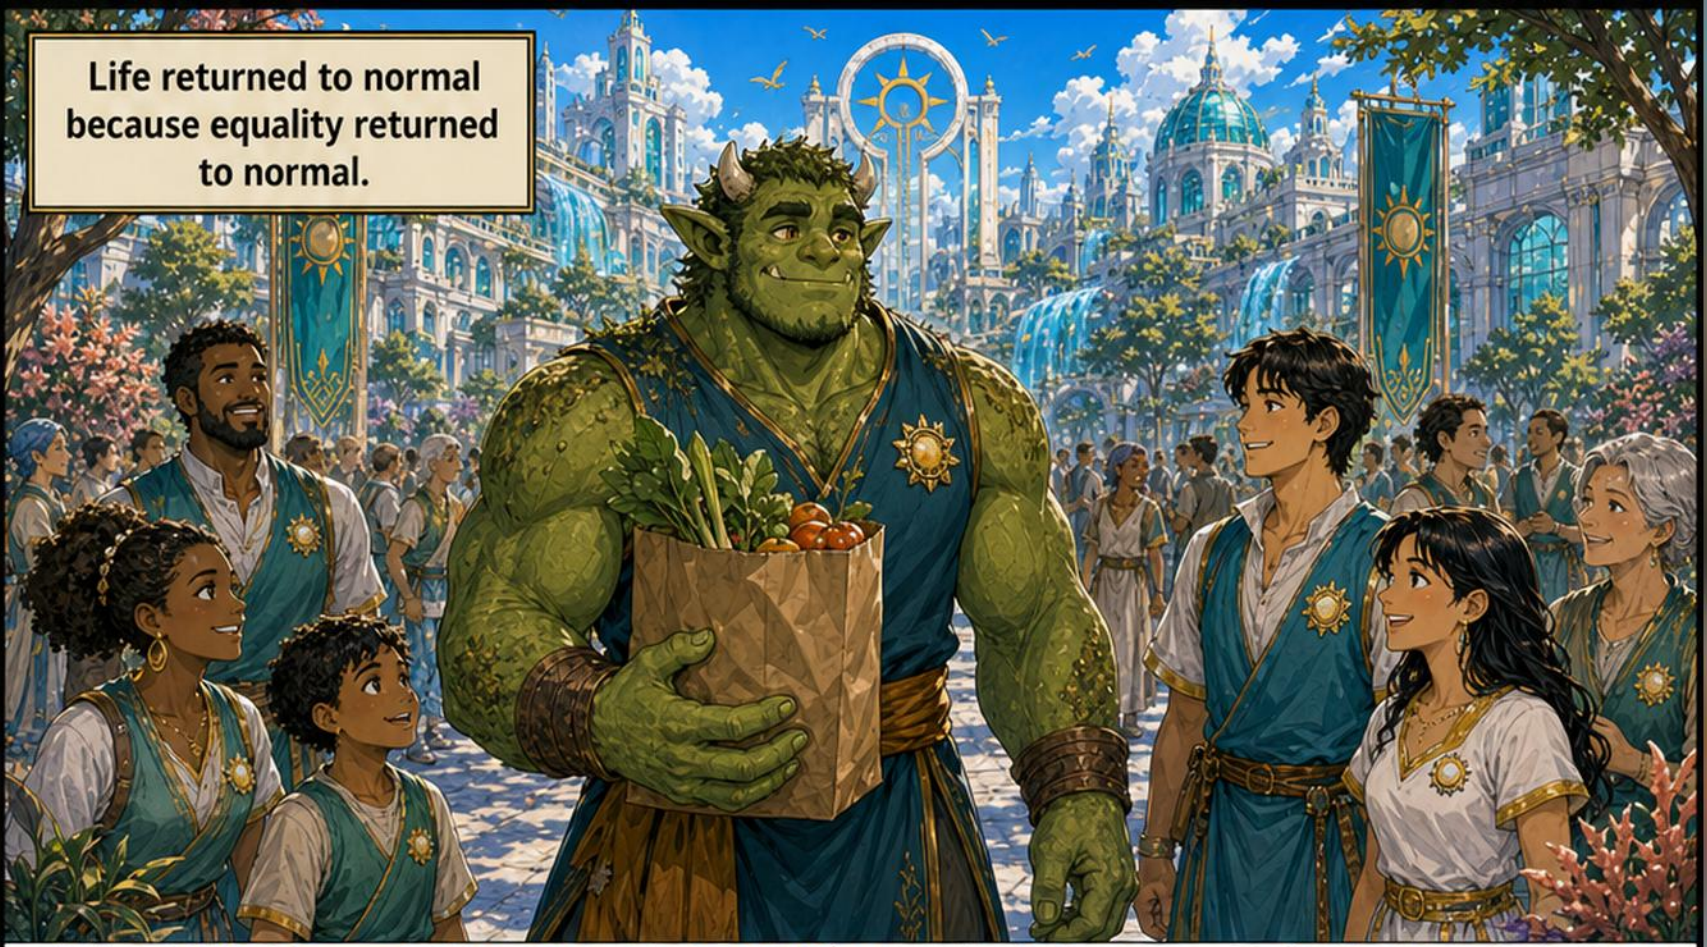

Grum wanted
no worship, throne,
or monument.

He wanted
his home back.

Life returned to normal
because equality returned
to normal.

Grum helped, worked,
laughed, and waited
like everyone else.

No monument rose in Grum's name,
because he wanted to be treated like everyone else.

SAVE THE WORLD YOU STAND IN.

EQUALITY NEEDS NO WORSHIP.

THE HERO ASKED FOR NO MONUMENT.
