

DREAM ANIME CHRONICLES

THE CHAMPION
OF PIE

The argument began
as a television stunt:
pie against cake, crust
against frosting, devotion
against decoration.

Every shout fed
the studio lights
until dessert loyalty
became a storm.

From that storm
stepped Cherry Garry,
black as a silhouette
and red as the fruit
at a pie's heart.

He heard one
purpose in the noise:
pie must win.

Cherry Garry
did not debate softly.

He carved red lines
through frosting banners.

He glued cake towers
to the ceiling with sticky light.

The crowd shouted pie
because they were afraid.

Afraid cheers
tasted empty.

He could feel arguments before they finished forming.

A bad comparison
glowed like a target.

A weak claim
cracked before his teeth.

But crushing a cake
defender's words did not
make anyone love pie.

Cherry demanded
the whole arena
say pie was best.

The chant grew loud enough to shake the cameras.

For one blazing
second, he became enormous.

Then the false love
passed through him
like air.

The studio had been built to turn dessert passion into spectacle.

Fear made the reactor hungry.

Crust, frosting, cherry light, and camera fire twisted into one collapsing storm.

If Cherry kept fighting the crowd, there would be no one left to love pie.

Cherry Garry, a black, muscular figure with a large red apple head featuring a wide, toothy grin, stands in a crowd. He is surrounded by people and floating cameras. A large, glowing pink and purple circular energy field is visible in the background.

Cherry Garry chose
the argument he could not lose.

A close-up of Cherry Garry's apple head, showing his sharp teeth and glowing eyes. He is surrounded by red energy lines and floating cameras. The background shows a crowd of people and a large, glowing pink and purple circular energy field.

Pie meant warmth,
shelter, a slice worth
reaching for.

Cherry Garry stands in the center of a crowd, holding a large, glowing pink and purple circular energy field. He is surrounded by people and floating cameras. The background shows a crowd of people and a large, glowing pink and purple circular energy field.

His lasers stopped
striking people and
started holding the arena together.

Cherry Garry stands in the center of a crowd, holding a large, glowing pink and purple circular energy field. He is surrounded by people and floating cameras. The background shows a crowd of people and a large, glowing pink and purple circular energy field.

For the first time,
the crowd cheered
because they wanted
him to win.

When the storm closed, no command remained.

One cake defender picked up a slice of cherry pie with shaking hands.

They chose it because the Champion of Pie had saved them.

Cherry Garry smiled with every tooth and accepted the victory as real.

Cherry Garry is the Champion of Pie, born when a television debate over pie and cake became powerful enough to create a fighter.

He has a black silhouetted body, a cherry head, sharp white teeth, sticky red laser blasts, and instincts that sense weak points in any argument.

His strength grows from real love of pie, not fear or forced applause.

Cherry still believes pie is superior, but his first lesson is clear: the best victory is making someone choose the slice freely.