

SUPERHERO MANDROID

THE BIRTHDAY
PROPHECY

Usually, Mandroid arrived after the monster.

This time, the portal opened first.

He stood ready in the green light.

Whatever came through would meet a rocket fist.

Then a human silhouette appeared.

The figure was not a demon brute.

She was young,
human-looking,
and crying.

A white hood framed blonde hair and
a green diamond.

Mandroid kept
his fist raised.

His duty said trap.
Her tears said person.

Mandroid hated
seeing anyone cry.

He knelt and asked
what was wrong.

She said today was
her eighteenth birthday.

That confused him
more than the portal.

On Earth, birthdays
meant celebration.

He wished her a happy birthday anyway.

There was nothing
happy about this birthday.

At eighteen, she had to fulfill her father's wishes.

The ground cracked
as green light filled
her eyes.

Mystic fire rose
from her hands.

As the daughter of Satan and Lilith,
she sadly declared the end of this world.

Mandroid heard
remorse under the power.

He had been built
to smite her.

Instead, he said
eighteen meant
choosing an adult life.

She screamed that she was not from Earth.

Behind his shield,
Mandroid answered:
neither am I.

She said Earth
would never accept her.

Mandroid raised his rocket fists without firing them.

Humanity accepted
him as a hero.

The green fire
faded.

Aurelia fell to
her knees.

She had been raised
as a weapon, but she
had never wanted ruin.

Mandroid
had shown her
another path.

The portal
began to close.

Aurelia thanked him through
the last tears.

She rose into
the sky and
made a new vow.

One day, she would become the hero
he saw in her.

