

SUPERHERO MANDROID

POSSIBLE FUTURE:
THE SUPER CHAMPIONS
OF MANDROID

AFTER THE GREATEST HERO FALLS, MANY RISE.

This is a possible future.

Doctor Dawes was gone,
and no one knew how
to keep Mandroid
alive forever.

His artificial skin wrinkled.
His artificial hair
turned gray.
His suit tore.
His green rocket
fists rusted.

At last,
his joints locked
and his circuits
fell silent.

Humans and aliens
built a museum around
the hero who saved them.

Every wall remembered
a battle he had won.

But portals
did not mourn him.

Robots, monsters,
and kaiju came
without mercy.

The future needed
more than one
champion.

Then the dark age
found the museum.

A kaiju tore through
the memorial plaza.

The guards were brave,
but bravery alone could
not lift the stones.

Five young aliens
had come only to
honor Mandroid.

When the ceiling
cracked above him,
they stepped forward.

Nara bent portal
light through crystal arms.

Koro anchored
the broken wall
with living armor.

Luma lifted children
on gentle fields of light.

Brakko shook the plaza
until the kaiju lost its footing, and Sella rewired
the doors open.

They learned what Mandroid had been
teaching for centuries:
a kind heart and a
clever mind can make anyone a hero.

Stories of the museum stand
crossed the stars.

More young heroes
came with stranger gifts
and the same promise.

They wore red and yellow
for the ancient hero who inspired them.

Under the museum, they built a headquarters for every world that needed
courage.

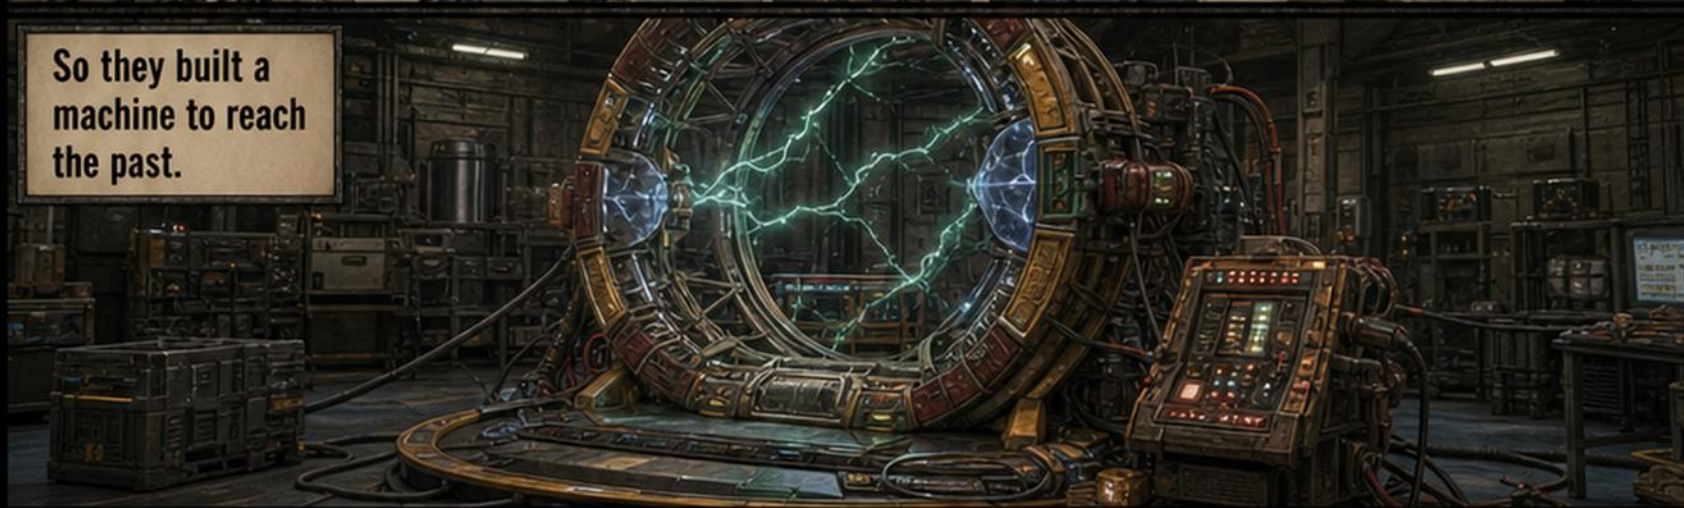

They named themselves
the Super Champions
of Mandroid.

Some Champions
wanted to thank
Mandroid in person.

So they built a
machine to reach
the past.

They flipped
the switch.

Nothing
happened.

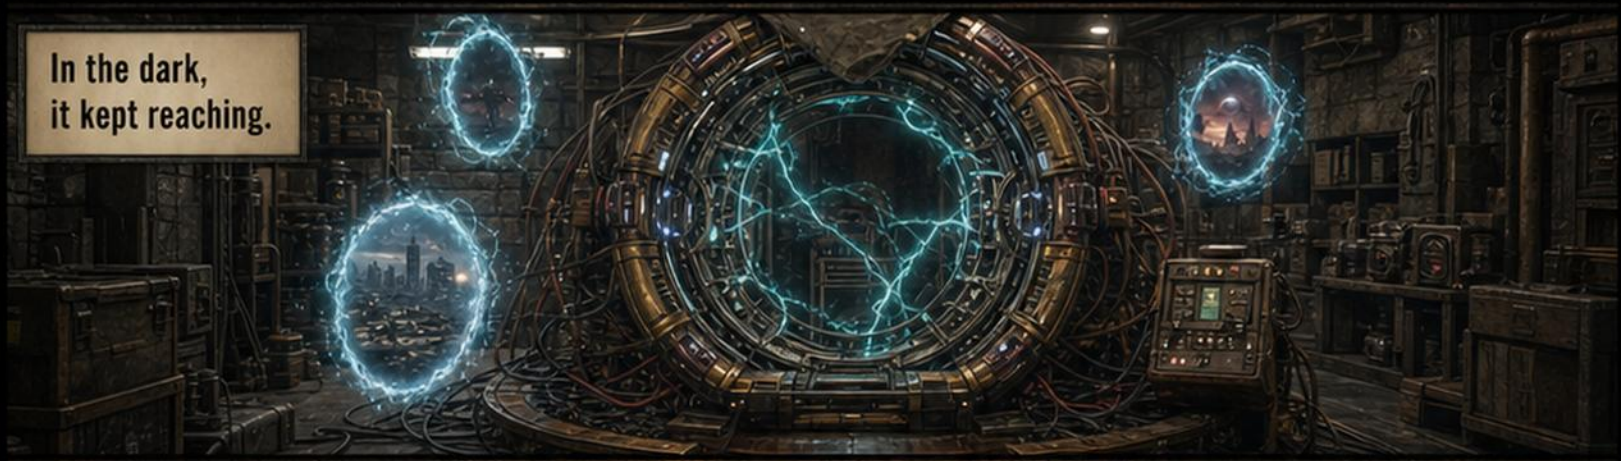

Wisdom won.
Time was too
dangerous to touch.

But the machine
had not failed.

In the dark,
it kept reaching.

It opened doors
across dimensions,
across space,
across time.

Long ago, those
doors sent invaders
to Earth and forced Doctor Dawes to build Version One.

In this possible
future, Mandroid
inspired the Champions, and
the Champions
created the need
for Mandroid.

